Story consequences

Everyone needs a sheet. Complete just one panel, fold it behind along the dotted line and pass to the next person. Continue through all six panels.

1. Invent a character.

One day,

Fold behind, then pass

2. Invent a second character.

met

Fold behind, then pass

3. Choose a place.

They were at

Fold behind, then pass

4. Write a short sentence.

The first character said:

Fold behind, then pass

5. Write a reply.

The other replied:

Fold behind, then pass

6. Say what happened next.

And the consequence was...

After panel 6, open the paper and read the whole story. The completed panels stay hidden until then.

Drawing consequences

Draw the head, fold it behind and pass. The next person draws the body, then folds and passes for the final part. Keep the short joining marks visible.

1. Head

Fold behind; leave the short marks visible

2. Body

Fold behind; leave the short marks visible

3. Feet, wheels or a tail

Open all three parts at the end. The last part can be feet, wheels, roots or a tail.

How to pass the paper

Two or more people

Start with one sheet per person. Everyone fills the same numbered panel at the same time, then folds and passes in the same direction. Use invented characters.

With two people, swap sheets after each panel. With three people, keep passing around the group; a sheet can come back to you. Add only the next answer and leave earlier answers hidden.

One completed story

One day, a puzzled robot

met a very small pirate

They were at the lost-property office

The first character said: Has anyone handed in the moon?

The other replied: Only the round bit.

And the consequence was... they went home carrying a bag of stars.

For the drawing sheet

Join the first drawing to the small marks at its bottom edge. Fold along the dotted line so the marks just below it stay visible. The next person joins their drawing to those marks. No real creature has to look like the result.

Use an ordinary sheet if you do not want to print. Divide it into six sections for the story or three for the drawing. Nothing needs to be cut out.
